"Me trataste con olvido" (Clásicas en rebeldía) is a show comprising theatre and lyrical poetry based on the voices of major female authors of the Renaissance and the Golden Age, many of whom were unjustly overlooked by history despite their unquestionable talent and the outright admiration of contemporary writers who were able to devote themselves to writing because they were men (...).

This is a show that is much more lyrical than dramatic, in which dance and music play a fundamental role; in which the actresses have built their characters by deciphering the souls of these females poets." Raúl Losáñez

Founded by Ana Ciontreras and Raúl Losáñez, who have had a long career in the performing arts, La Otra Arcadia is a recent theatre company whose work ranges from the purely classical and dramatic to the contemporary and post-dramatic. Its founders conceive performance as a ductile framework that should facilitate, aesthetically and intellectually, the spectator's reception of the artistic and theatrical event. This is the company's fourth production.

The objective of this first festival, co-organised by the Malaga City and Provincial Councils, aims to disseminate pre-20th century theatrical heritage, with a special focus on Spain's Golden Age, in the city and the province of Malaga. By combining theatrical performances with film screenings and training, the festival also seeks to foster encounters with professionals of the sector and to enhance the value and comprehension of classical theater. Each show is geared at a specific audience, including all audiences, young people and adults.
