A trip through the world of the other theatre, the one that has to do with clowns, fabulists, masks, buffoons, impossible or surprising objects, games, music and pantomime....

Yorick and Tubitos are characters who seem to have come out of one of Beckett's insane plays. Their vicissitudes begin with the arrival of the Muse of Fire, who dance while a voice recites a particular vision of a text by Shakespeare. Beautiful words that speak of the importance of imagination in theatre and of the need of the audience's involvement.
