In a herd of elephants, all of the females are pink except for Margarita, who soon learns that female elephants are not allowed to do some things that are reserved for the males. Margarita does not accept this tradition and shows her female friends that equality is not a utopia.

A reflection on the cult of physical appearance and a criticism of a society that predestines the future of its members and classifies them on the basis of their gender. But above all, a hymn to liberty and equality.
